I experience how my faith community practices peace and justice, respects human dignity, and cares for creation by serving alongside others. I recognize that others don't have everything they need, and I feel better when I have a chance to help.	I understand that practicing peace and justice, respecting human dignity, and caring for creation are part of what it means to be a Christian and part of what it means for me to be part of a faith community.	I notice when the size of others' needs is bigger than what I can do to help and look for ways for my faith community to join me in doing more. I start asking why others' needs are so great and look for new ways to help.	I understand that part of my purpose and call as a Christian is to serve others and care for creation - and I choose things to do in my community and/or the larger world that help me live into that call.
I use my gifts in service opportunities that others create for me.	I see gifts (talents, resources, fruits of the spirit) that others have in my community and how our gifts become bigger when we share them.	I notice that my gifts are different from others around me and wonder if I have gifts that haven't been recognized yet.	I am confident in some of the gifts God has given me and am confident in using them to serve others.
